

Conclusion

This present study was about the presence of oral tori and parafunctional activity between TMD and control subject. The results show that parafunctional activity is a common factor in the etiology of both TM and TMD in some patients.

Torus mandibularis might be useful as an indicator of increased risk of TMD.