AMONG the war-time careers of Malays one of the most interesting must surely be that of TUNGUU MAHMUD MOHYIDDEEN of Kelantan, who was awarded the M.B.E. for his splendid work at Pompong Island during the evacuation of Singapore.

Youngest son of the late Tunku Abdul Kadir Kamardin, who was at one time Raja of Pattani, one of the predominantly Malay provinces of southern Siam, Tunku Mahmud Mohyuddin was educated in Bangkok and Penang and later founded three businesses and the Malay Tailoring School in Kelantan.

In 1933, however, he joined the Education Department as Inspector of Malay Schools, and when war came in 1941 was acting Superintendent of Education for the state.

Dramatic Escape

MOBILIZED with the Kelantan Volunteer force as a company quartermaster sergeant, he was one of the four Malay members of the unit who chose to continue with the Army when the force was demobilized in January, 1942.

He did broadcasts in Malay from the Singapore station in the closing days of Singapore before the surrender, and was ordered away, travelling to the ill-fated Rawa, which was bombed and suffered heavy casualties off Pompong.

A writer in the London Daily Mirror recently described the Tunku's rescue work as heroic, saying that he saved scores of lives and that Joseph Conrad had he been alive would have composed a whole epic about what this Malay prince accomplished.

broadcasts for the British Ministry of Information.

Tunku Mahmud Mohyuddin also found time to found the Malaya Lodge in Delhi, where many Malays stranded outside the Peninsula after the war found a place of refuge and he travelled through Arabia, true Transjordan, Egypt, Palestine and to Britain to visit Malays, study their welfare and put up recommendations to the Government for assistance.

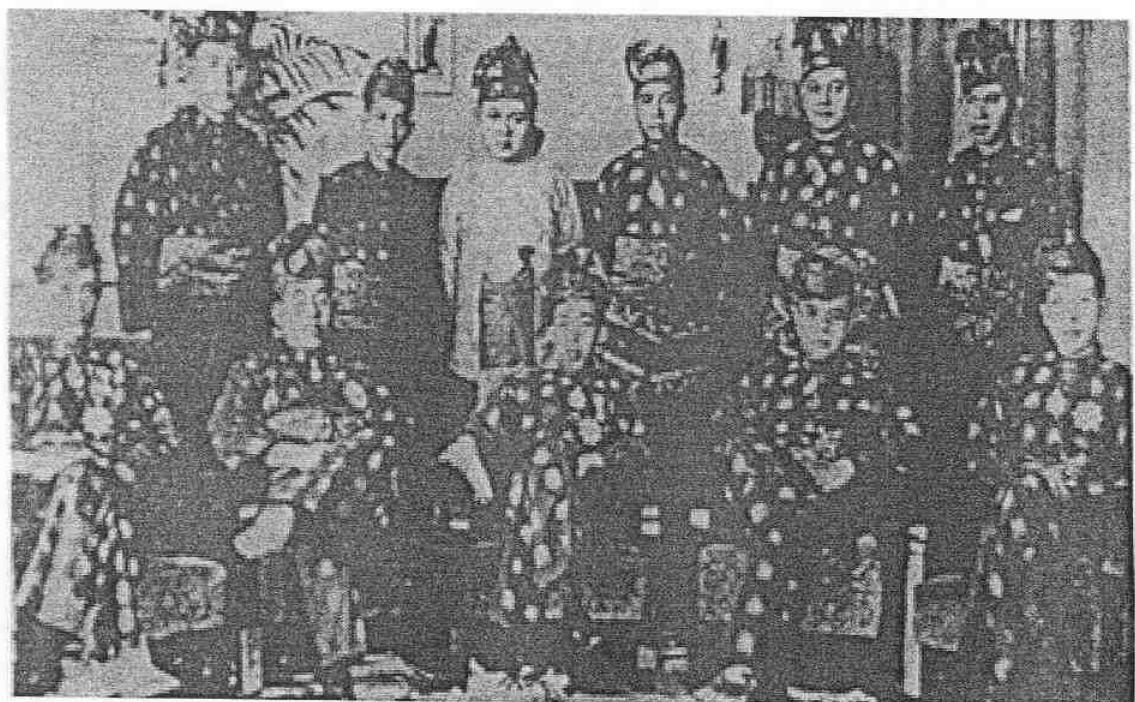

A Malay friend also tells of that the Tunku was connected with the plans for organizing the Malay underground movement in the Peninsula.

The Tunku returned to this country with the British Military Administration as Deputy Chief Civil Affairs Officer to Kelantan and left the service when the civil government took over. He has been enjoying a well-earned holiday at a seaside resort a few miles from Kota Bharu.
